

Here is how the tax money laundering (interest) scam, is suppose to be working, according to information being relayed, by former Nova Scotia government employees.

The bureaucrat who is overseeing the government tax dollars for the department, has been accessing those funds , transferring them into an offshore account and leaving them there for a short time, maybe just 30 days. These tax dollars which do not belong to the bureaucrat, is earning interest in “their” offshore account and they leave the interest in their offshore account for when they are ready to us them.

When this is repeated time and time again, in short burst over a long period, the bureaucrat builds up quite a tidy nest egg for his / her retirement.

Keep in mind, these tax dollars being transferred into these offshore accounts to accumulate this interest, belonged to all taxpayers. If this is the case, then isn't this considered theft and misuse of “our” taxes? Once again the Auditor General should be on the job and investigate .
